Fexco is an Ireland based financial services and financial technology company focusing on bureau de change & payment card services. We were asked to put a design together to completely refurbish their main boardroom and basement meeting rooms in their Dublin office. The building is a combination of 3 Georgian town-houses merged into one large building of office spaces, so the challenge was to redesign and modernise the spaces while retaining as much of the original features, such as the high ceiling, original fireplace and cornice detailing. The client wanted to retain the crystal chandelier and oak boardroom table, so we refreshed the chandelier and resurfaced the board table to bring it back to it's former glory; all other furniture and carpeting was chosen to complement these pieces. We installed wall panelling bordered with LED lighting designed to enhance the cornice detailing and to brighten the room, as well as removing the heavy window dressing to increase natural light. The basement meeting room was given life with plenty of vivid colours brought through in the furniture choice and a full size wall graphic of Fexco's picturesque head office in Kerry, overlooking the river Laune.
